

Coro: Phoenix Suns' Eric Bledsoe to return in next week, against Warriors, Clippers or Cavaliers

Written by

Wednesday, 05 March 2014 22:14 -

According to Paul Coro of azcentral.com, the Suns will activate point guard Eric Bledsoe some time in the next four games.

Point guard Eric Bledsoe will definitely not play on Thursday night against OKC. But he could play anytime after that

Of the three return date options, a Sunday return is the least likely because the Suns play again a night later after a short flight.

"You don't know how they'll come back," Hornacek said. "We might bring Eric in off the bench a little bit. We hope he's there at the end of game. If you throw him right into the starting lineup, it might screw you up for a few games."

With Plumlee and Bledsoe returning any game now, the Suns will continue to fight their toughest stretch of schedule with upcoming games against Western foes Oklahoma City (Thursday), at Golden State (Sunday) and then at the Los Angeles Clippers (Monday) on a back-to-back.

Goran Dragic also now has a left side strain. Sounds like a bruised rib to me.

All credit to Paul Coro on this. Hit up the link .