The Phoenix Suns have won 10 more games than the Atlanta Hawks in the NBA season thus far. And yet, Atlanta holds a 3 game cushion for the 8th seed in the Eastern Conference while the Suns are fighting tooth and nail for their first post-season action in 3 seasons. Such is the talent gap between the East and West. Tonight is a chance for Phoenix to emphasize that gap.

The Opponent - Atlanta Hawks

Phoenix beat Atlanta in a track meet earlier this month, 129-120. Despite both teams being on the second night of a back-to-back, given the Hawks' propensity for giving up points (17th in defensive rating), it would be fair to expect more of the same. Atlanta has been streakier than Channing Frye, losing 6 in a row then winning 5 in a row before dropping their last 2 straight. It's probably no coincidence that the last 2 losses have come without ace 3-point shooter in the line-up. He is listed as day-to-day with back spasms and could miss tonight's game. That would be a boon for Phoenix.

Kyle Korver

The Suns' frontcourt will have its hands full with Paul Millsap and DeMarre Carroll, both of whom have played well in the absence of Al Horford this season. Millsap is both Atlanta's leading scorer and rebounder since Horford went down. The way Phoenix has been hemorrhaging points in the paint, I would expect the Hawks to go to him early and often. It will be the Suns' first time playing against Millsap as he missed the first game with Phoenix due to a knee injury.

The Suns

Phoenix has won their last 3 games despite inconsistent play at both ends of the court. This has moved them to within a half-game of both the Dallas Mavericks and Memphis Grizzlies (who hold a tie-break over the Suns). This is a should-win game for a team sorely in need of them.

Eric Bledsoe's strong return should continue with a match-up against the Hawks' Jeff Teague.

In the last game against the Suns, Teague looked All-NBA, with 29 points, 9 assists and 6 rebounds. Bledsoe's on-ball defense should prevent a repeat of that performance. Additionally, the Suns should be able to generate some serious offense against an Atlanta team that ranks in the bottom half of the league in both opponent FG% and 3PT%.

The Stats

Note: For the Hawks, I've used the statistical leaders who are expected to be available for tonight's game.

	Suns	Hawks
Record	41-29	31-37
Rebounds	43.1	40.0
Assists	19.2	25.1

TOs	15.4	15.3
Points	105.5	101.6
Pace (Poss/Gm)	6th	12th
Offensive Rank (Pts/Poss)	8th	15th
Opp Points	102.9	102.3
Defensive Rank	13th	17th
Shooting %	46.3	45.8

Leading Rebounder	Miles Plumlee (8.0)	Paul Millsap (8.2)
Leading Minutes	Goran Dragic (34.7)	Paul Millsap (33.2)

The Lineups

	Suns	Hawks
Point Guard	Eric Bledsoe	Jeff Teague
Shooting Guard	Goran Dragic	Shelvin Mack
Small Forward	P.J. Tucker	DeMarre Carroll
Power Forward	Channing Frye	Paul Millsap
Center	Miles Plumlee	Pero Antic

Key Match-Up

The Hawks' Undersized Backcourt vs. The Suns' Undersized Backcourt - It's not often Phoenix plays a team that runs out a pair of 6'3" or shorter guards in their starting five, but that's just what Atlanta has in Jeff Teague and

Shelvin Mack

. With Bledsoe matching up with Teague, Goran Dragic? should run wild on Mack. Unless Kyle Korver plays, in which case, the backcourt match-ups will become something of a chess game between

Jeff Hornacek

and Hawks head coach

And as mentioned above, Channing Frye and Markieff Morris will be tasked with checking Paul Millsap. Frye is the better rim defender (allowing 51.9% at the rim vs. 56.0% for Morris), but Morris is more mobile. If the Suns can find their defensive intensity and limit the rest of the Hawks, then maybe Millsap gets his and the Suns win anyway.

The Prediction

No bones about it, this should be a Phoenix win going away, especially if Korver doesn't play. But since nothing has been a given with this team, I think it will be another close and high-scoring affair. 113-107, Suns
